Natalie Haynes

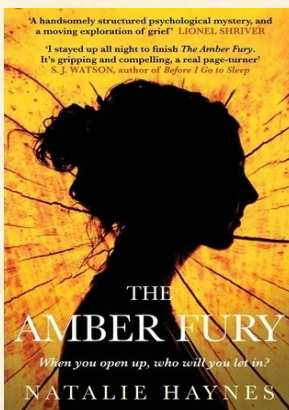

from London

the Author of the Bestselling Novel of 2014 The Amber Fury

The Amber Road, or Keeping Up with Electra & Co.

Natalie Haynes (b. 1974) is a writer, broadcaster, stand-up comedian, and promoter of urban chicken keeping. She is engaged in popularizing the ancient heritage: among others, she presented documentaries about the revival of Latin teaching and about using comedy in the classroom. She appears on BBC Radio 4 and writes for The Independent. She has judged the Man Booker Prize. She was a guest contributor for The Times. She wrote the fortnightly TV Detectives blog for The Guardian, and has written for The Observer, Sunday Times, Sunday Telegraph, and others. Although Natalie has retired from her decade-long stand-up career, she occasionally returns for benefit gigs. Her book for young readers, The Great Escape (2007), won a PETA Proggy Award for best animal-friendly children's book, in 2008. Her first non-fiction book, The Ancient Guide to Modern Life (2010), was serialised by The Times and translated into Greek, Spanish, and Portuguese. Natalie's first novel, The Amber Fury, published in 2014, met with an enthusiastic reception among classicists and a wide public.
